The SRA College Associate

The SRA College Sales force is an unusual organization. Nearly every man working in the field possesses a master's degree, and several hold or have completed work toward a doctorate. All of them have a strong educational background, essentially at the college level, and many ranked high in the educational world before joining the SRA staff. Recognized as professional educators as well as salesmen, SRA's College Associates are able to provide maximum service to the colleges and universities and to assist them in achieving the most effective results from the company's materials.

Please consider the college associate in your area your personal liaison with SRA. He is at your disposal as a consultant in many and diverse areas: curriculum planning, structuring testing and/or guidance programs, setting up reading-study skills centers, planning educational conferences, and to assist you in the many areas of federal legislation which affect higher education.

The SRA College Associate is privileged to serve you.

THE CONDUCT OF INQUIRY: Methodology for Behavioral Science

By ABRAHAM KAPLAN, University of Michigan

"... contains an unusually well-informed and highly readable critique of the major issues in the over-all logic of inquiry. It discusses them in the light of intimate familiarity with the procedures of the behavioral as well as the natural sciences, and exhibits the continuity of method in all areas of knowledge without ignoring the distinctive problems that arise in the study of human affairs. The book is not an account of specialized research techniques. Its aim is to clarify the nature of science as a process, by examining the functions as well as the corresponding limitations of various general and organically related methods that are employed in one form or another in all scientific inquiries."—ERNEST NAGEL in The American Sociological Review

"Kaplan covers a wide range of topics and goes beyond most current books on the philosophy of science, because he is not completely bound by any particular point of view, and his discussion includes many references to hypothetical problems in the social—or behavioral—sciences."—AARON V. CICOUREL in The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science

"This is the book I have been waiting for during my entire professional career. It serves a purpose which to my knowledge, no other book does. Kaplan restores to a position of importance the thinking of Peirce, James, and Dewey and thus writes a book of better balance and more enduring usefulness than anything else in the field."—MAURICE P. HUNT, Fresno State College

"I think this is a great book, and also a remarkable book. Kaplan both grasps the philosophic issues and understands the problems of the research person. He is clear, broad, non-doctrinaire. He is also genuinely amusing. I think this is the single best discussion of the logic of research in the social sciences which I have encountered."—ROBERT S. WEISS, Brandeis University

"It is required reading in all of my research and methods courses."—E. BOGDANOFF, San Fernando Valley State College

CULTURES OF THE NORTH PACIFIC COAST

By PHILIP DRUCKER, with an introduction by HARRY B. HAWTHORN, University of British Columbia

The first five chapters give a comprehensive overview of North Pacific Coast cultures—habitat, economy, technology, social and political organization, religion and ritual, and population and culture subdivisions. In other chapters the full range and diversity of Indian culture are sampled, from the whale hunts of the Nootka to the feuds, wars and legal institutions of the Yurok. The final chapter discusses acculturation among the peoples of the area. Sixteen full-color pages of masks and other artifacts, numerous black and white drawings, and two maps illuminate the text.

PEASANTS NO MORE: Social Class and Social Change in Southern Italy

By JOSEPH LOPREATO, University of Texas

This book analyzes social change in southern Italy as a consequence of emigration. Introductory chapters examine, in historical perspective, some of the major economic, cultural, and political problems afflicting the southern Italian peasantry. Lopreato then presents the results of a study, in an Italian village, of the stratification system, of social mobility, and of factors in the peasant's social awakening. His conclusion is that, as a result of emigration, the traditionally impoverished peasants of southern Italy have developed the means of a middle-class style of life with a pronounced motivation for achievement.

Recommended for advanced courses in stratification, social change, underdeveloped areas, and the like.

THE WORLD POLITICS SERIES

PAUL SEABURY, Editor

I am delighted to have this book for use in my seminar. It is an excellent collection of readings dealing with one of the most important problems in the field of international relations.—FRANCES O. WILCOX, Johns Hopkins University

This collection of readings compiled by the Finkelsteins is a welcome addition to the literature in the field of international relations for the undergraduate courses.—WALLIS L. RILEY, University of Washington

COLLECTIVE SECURITY

Edited by MARINA S. FINKELSTEIN and
LAWRENCE S. FINKELSTEIN

This book is a dissection of the concept and application of collective security. As such, it deals with the heart of international efforts to keep the peace and to create international organizations concerned with keeping the peace. The readings are drawn from widely differing sources, and the authors conclude with an essay on the possibilities of collective security, relating their thesis to the materials presented in the text.

Mr. Finkelstein is Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense (International Security Affairs) and formerly Vice-President of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace. Mrs. Finkelstein is a writer and editor on international relations.

ALASKAN ESKIMOS

By WENDELL H. OSWALT,
University of California, Los Angeles

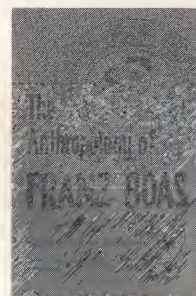

In this volume Professor Oswalt describes Alaskan Eskimos as they lived when first encountered by Europeans. He focuses on the similarities and differences in the ways of life among those groups of Eskimos who represent the major linguistic and cultural variants.

The opening chapter describes the different environmental settings occupied by Eskimos in Alaska; this is followed by a classification of the major sub-cultural groupings. Chapter Two discusses their linguistic affinities through time, cultural origins, and prehistory. The third chapter deals with Eskimos as biological beings viewed by anthropologists, pathologists, and physiologists. Following these introductory chapters, the core of the book is devoted to descriptions as well as comparative analyses of settlement and community patterns, technology, subsistence and clothing, the individual, and religious behavior. The book concludes with an integrative summary of the diversity among Alaskan Eskimos in terms of culture history and ecological adaptations.

One of the distinct merits of this book is that it presents a segment of the Eskimo population which has often been slighted in general discussions of Eskimos. It was in Alaska that the greatest complexity among Eskimos emerged; here too Eskimo culture has its deepest roots, and in this area the population has been the largest.

There are line drawings, five maps, black and white photographs plus a four-page insert of color photographs.

PRIMITIVE AND PEASANT ECONOMIC SYSTEMS

By MANNING NASH, University of Chicago

"For more than a decade I have been concerned with the problems of economic anthropology and the involvement of primitives and peasants in various processes of social and cultural change. This book is an outgrowth of that concern, tempered by years of trying to communicate through teaching and writing the sense of excitement, the intellectual challenge, and the human relevance of the study of economic anthropology, especially the dynamics of social and economic change."—from the Preface.

The major innovation in this work is a systematic theory of the form, function, and dynamics of primitive and peasant economic systems. The emphasis is on change and modernization, with an extended, in-depth analysis of selected instances. Some economic concepts are integrated with social anthropology.

The author has drawn on his own field work in Guatemala, Mexico, and Burma and on his previous writing about those societies.

THE WORLD POLITICS SERIES

The volume shows a deep sense of appreciation of matters that count in the international relationship. The readings convey an admirable sense of perspective stretching as they do from the Greeks to the modern era. A pleasure to read. —N. J. PADERFOW, Massachusetts Institute of Technology

Very good background readings for Political Science, Political Geography, International Relations courses—good cross-section; very readable—enjoyed it very much.—T. LADONSKY, State University of New York, Farmingdale

I think the premises of Cox are sound in his collection of readings on the state in international relations. His two purposes — (1) to understand the specific political forms and concepts which had to do with the actual international relations of the period, and (2) to make use of such international relations in understanding one type of international relations with another — are fully realized. He does an excellent job.—JAMES A. GATHINGS, Bucknell University

THE STATE IN INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

Compiled and edited by RICHARD H. COX,
State University of New York at Buffalo

The 41 selections in this work are intended by Professor Cox to be interpretive rather than descriptive. "They are for the most part," he writes in his introduction, "statements by either political theorists or political practitioners; and they were written anywhere between the fifth century B.C. and the twentieth century A.D. Thus, men as different as Aristotle, an ancient Greek philosopher, Joseph Stalin, a modern totalitarian leader, Francisco Suarez, a sixteenth-century Spanish Jesuit, and Wendell Willkie, a defeated candidate for President of the United States, speak to the reader."

And, from another section of the introduction: "My object... is to encourage thinking about the nature of international relations, not to supply information which can and should be obtained in other ways."

BALANCE OF POWER

Edited by PAUL SEABURY,
University of California, Berkeley

The 22 selections in this work include an introduction, and a closing essay, The Idea of the Status Quo, by Professor Seabury, and an essay (published here for the first time), The Balance of Power and the Balance of Terror, by Professor Glenn Snyder, State University of New York at Buffalo.

Professor Seabury writes in his introduction: "When the idea of balance is applied to human affairs, Society and the State in particular, it may be said to have two general kinds of meanings. The first of these focuses principally on the effect of energy and force on constitutional form through time. It is concerned with matters of conservation and change within a social system, or between that system and others. The second focuses principally on the relationships among specific systems in their relation to each other."

Among authorities whose works appear in this book are: Kautilya, Aristotle, Demosthenes, David Hume, Carl Friedrich and Charles Blitzer, Arthur Koestler, Edmund Burke, Woodrow Wilson, Jawaharlal Nehru and John F. Kennedy.

HISTORY IN THE U.S.S.R.

Selected Readings

Edited, with Commentary, by MARIN PUNDEFF,
San Fernando Valley State College

"This work, which has grown out of teaching and is primarily intended for teaching purposes, is conceived as an introduction to a field — the history of historical scholarship in the Soviet Union — through pertinent documents and writings. The materials presented are formulations of basic Marxist-Leninist doctrine, views of political leaders and influential historians, and official decrees and directives governing the writing and teaching of history. The subject has a nearly fifty-year-long history and has evolved certain distinctive features, yet it is still a virgin field in the Soviet Union. There are no comprehensive surveys or documentary collections, and the limited studies of individual aspects and phases are few. Being the history of 'the most political of the sciences,' the field has been extremely difficult and dangerous for Soviet scholars to approach. The direct and massive intervention of Stalin in historiography made it impossible during his era to operate with anything but the facts and interpretations he imposed. Only since 1956 has it been made possible for Soviet historians to consider other facts and to attempt a more rational assessment of the history of the post-1917 period and of their own discipline within it. Old dangers and continuing difficulties and limitations which affect their work are therefore reflected in the materials reproduced and cited here."—from the Preface.

Most of the readings have been uncovered and translated for the first time. There is a substantial bibliography of suggested further readings, and an index.

ARCHAEOLOGY: An Introduction

By CLEMENT W. MEIGHAN,
University of California, Los Angeles

In the two introductory chapters, Meighan discusses the archaeologist's analytical and field methods. In the eight chapters that follow he uses a common intellectual framework to examine specific sites, which range from ancient times to recent periods, from simple cultures to complex civilizations, from both Old and New Worlds. By showing how the archaeologist thinks about his material to draw conclusions, he permits easy comparison of significant features in the examples.

It contains 105 illustrations, including eight pages of color plates and a world map locating sites.

THE SOCIAL CONTEXT OF AMBITION: A Study of High-School Seniors in Los Angeles

By RALPH H. TURNER,
University of California, Los Angeles

"If mobility does leave its impress on the personalities of the successful, that impress will certainly vary according to the nature of the mobility experience. Hence, a detailed examination of the social settings within which the mobility is pursued and achieved is important to the ultimate interpretation of democratic values. . . . It is our hope that certain ideas incorporated in this research, such as the stratification of destination, intrastratum ambition, value relevancy, and the value differentiation between male and female forms of ambition will make a small contribution."—from the Foreword.

RANDOM NUMBERS IN UNIFORM AND NORMAL DISTRIBUTION With Indices for Subsets

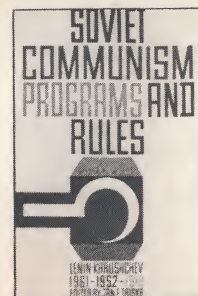

Compiled by CHARLES E. CLARK,
System Development Corporation

This book contains a table of random digits and a table of normally distributed random numbers. The distinctive and novel feature is the presentation of statistics of subsets of the random numbers. The subsets and their statistics permit, among other advantages, the efficiencies of stratified sampling.

The book consists of an Introduction, which is descriptive of the plan and purpose and which gives directions for use of the tables; two tables of random numbers, each 58 pages long; and 78 pages of statistics for subsets.

SOVIET COMMUNISM: Programs and Rules

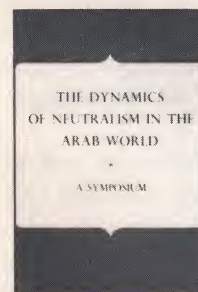

Edited and with an introduction by JAN F. TRISKA,
Stanford University

The volume presents complete translations of the following basic documents:

- 1961 Programme of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union
- 1919 Program of the All-Russian Communist Party
- 1961 Rules of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union
- 1952 Rules of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union

The publication of these documents in English makes it possible, on the basis of official texts, to evaluate the importance of the changes that have taken place in the USSR since 1919. The book also makes it possible to make two interesting comparisons: (1) of current documents with their analogs of earlier date, and (2) of draft versions with final versions of the current documents.

Edited and with an introduction by FAYEZ A. SAYEGH

Eight leading Arab diplomats, scholars, and political thinkers collaborate on this study of neutralism in the Arab world. In his introduction, Professor Sayegh establishes a framework for the identification of different types of neutralism and traces their development. The subsequent essays constitute a dynamic approach to the definition and implications of neutralism. Essay topics are: The Philosophy of Neutralism in the Arab Mind; Nonalignment in the Arab World; Syria and Neutralism; Algeria in the Cold War; Neutralism in the United Arab Republic; The Asian-African Group in a Changing World; The Role of the Arab World in the Afro-Asian Conferences from Bandung to Belgrade; Arab Neutralism and the West. EMERGING AFRICA IN WORLD AFFAIRS

Edited by DAVID K. MARVIN, San Francisco State College

In his introduction Professor Marvin writes: "The readings included in this book have been selected with an eye to relatively permanent and important elements on the African scene. They focus on trends and tendencies which seem to be emerging, and on background and apparent causes for them. The book is intended, then, as something more than a report on African current events. It is hoped that the reader will emerge somewhat better informed on typical African attitudes in international affairs, on international issues of a more permanent or perennial nature relating to Africa, and on some possible ways of looking at the new role now being played by Africa in international relations."

The book comprises 42 selections approaching international relations both in an African context and in a worldwide context. The prominent statesmen and historians whose work is represented in the book include 14 African nationals.

SMALL GROUPS: Some Sociological Perspectives

By CLOVIS R. SHEPHERD,
National Training Laboratories, NEA

The two major purposes of this work are: "(1) to introduce the reader to a selection of sociological and social-psychological theory and research dealing with the small group; and (2) to organize this material within the perspectives of pure and applied social science, and within the philosophical positions of symbolic interactionism and positivism."

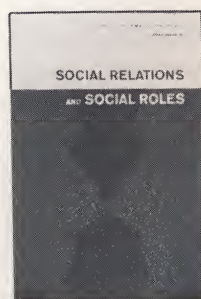

The study is organized under four major headings: Perspectives for Understanding; The Art of Speculation: Small-Group Theory; The State of Empirical Knowledge: Research Findings; and Interpretation, Prediction, and Control. A selected bibliography accompanies each chapter. Leading theoretical concepts about the small group are summarized in a series of abstracts of pertinent literature.

SOCIAL RELATIONS AND SOCIAL ROLES:

The Unfinished Systematic Sociology

By FLORIAN ZNANIECKI

Chandler Publishing Company is proud to have been entrusted with the publication of the last work of the late Professor Florian Znaniecki. His daughter, Dr. Helena Znaniecki Lopata of Roosevelt University, prepared the book for the press and has provided a biographical essay and a full bibliography of the Works of Florian Znaniecki. This stimulating book has received a warm welcome from teachers of social psychology, social organization, and social theory.

In this work Dr. Znaniecki laid the ground work for the restudy of much anthropological and historical data from a sociological point of view. The first of two parts sets forth The Scope of Sociology, with definitions, descriptions of fields of research, comparison of humanistic versus naturalistic approaches. The second part, Social Relations, covers the study of social relations in communities, mother-child relations, the relations of polite companionship, the integration of social relations, and the concepts of social role, of persons, of social circles, of personal rights, and of personal functions. Roles in tribal communities are discussed, as well as the social role of kings, the functional differentiation of religious roles, and the differentiation of roles of warriors. The book concludes with a chapter on The Evolution of Political Roles.

ANTI-FEDERALISTS VERSUS FEDERALISTS: Selected Documents

Edited by JOHN D. LEWIS, Oberlin College

It has been acknowledged for many years that The Federalist is one of the most important American contributions to the literature of political science, and that it is relevant to an understanding of the present American system as well as to its historical development. More recently the role of the anti-Federalists in sharpening early American conceptions of constitutional government and democracy has also been acknowledged. Aside from intrinsic merits in some of the anti-Federalist arguments, one must know what their major objections were if one is to understand what the authors of The Federalist were talking about, and why.

This book brings together selected documents concerning the famous debate over the adoption of the Constitution in 1787-1788. The arguments of the defenders of the Constitution are drawn chiefly, but not exclusively, from The Federalist, by Hamilton, Madison, and Jay. The anti-Federalist arguments, less readily available today, are from various sources.

The editor's introduction analyzes the structure of the arguments of both sides, and generous footnotes direct the reader to the evidence for analysis and interpretation.

Recommended for courses in American government or the Constitution (with historical perspective), American or constitutional history, or American political thought.

CHICAGO SOCIOLOGY, 1920-1932

By ROBERT E. L. FARIS,
University of Washington

From the Preface: "The purpose of this volume is to describe the way in which the Department of Sociology at the University of Chicago came into its dominant position in American sociology and to attempt a partial explanation of this renaissance at Chicago. The author seeks to be objective and does not intend to provide appreciation for or tribute to worthy men or to an organization, but only to describe what happened and how.

"The focus of the inquiry is on the few years in which the Chicago department achieved a strong research momentum and held a sort of temporary performance championship in the United States, which in that time also meant the world leadership of sociology. The period of interest therefore extends approximately from the early 1920's until some time in the middle 1930's. There is no decline and fall of the Chicago department in the latter part of this era, but rather a healthy emergence of excellence and productivity in sociology departments at other strong universities. Some of these departments evolved their own special characteristics and took the leadership in certain aspects of sociology, but none were unaffected by the earlier accomplishments at Chicago."

Among the sociologists prominently discussed are Albion W. Small, W. I. Thomas, George H. Mead, Robert E. Park, Ernest W. Burgess, Ellsworth Faris, William F. Ogburn, and Louis Wirth. The book contains photographic portraits of all these men.

LEADERSHIP AND PRODUCTIVITY:

Some Facts of Industrial Life

By ROBERT DUBIN, University of Oregon,
GEORGE C. HOMANS, Harvard University,
FLOYD C. MANN, University of Michigan, and DELBERT C. MILLER, Indiana University

"This book addresses the broad question: 'What are the social systems in which supervisors and workers interact to produce the goods and services of society?' The immediate question is: 'Can leaders and supervisors really influence their associates and followers to increase productivity in their common enterprise?' Thus the book attacks an intensely practical problem and contains significant original contributions to knowledge about supervisory influences on productivity as well as other consequences of supervisory practices for the behaviors of subordinates. Each analysis is made in the framework of formal organizations and thereby contributes to the recently recognized field called organization theory."—from the Preface.

GARRISONS AND GOVERNMENT: Politics and the Military in New States

Edited by WILSON C. MCWILLIAMS, Oberlin College

This book is a survey of the political role of military organizations in developing countries, set in a broad comparative and historical framework, designed to help the reader understand the influence of the military on politics in new and old nations. It presents the military not as "violent," but as the earliest reflection of man's effort to control violence, an effort which is one of the fundamental problems of politics.

It includes as background the experience of European states and the United States, as well as the results of relevant studies in the social sciences. Attention is given to issues of political theory and problems for the international community, also to such recent events as African military coups and seizure of power in Indonesia.

Recommended as a case study for courses in comparative or international politics, politics of developing nations, political sociology, or social change.

SOCIAL DISORGANIZATION IN AMERICA

By REECE MCGEE, Macalester College

Professor McGee studies disorganization as related to the individual, to the group, to the organization, and to society. Among the many aspects of disorganization he discusses are suicide, drug addiction, alcoholism, the "Beatnik Rebellion," the criminal subculture, and juvenile gangs. From the perspective of disorganization, he takes a new look at the American university, the military academy and military life, the American mental hospital, the confused status of American women, the repercussions of technological progress, and the ethics of industry.

Employing a nonevaluative approach, the author sets forth the proposition that disorganization results from either or both of the following conditions: (a) the absence of a recognized set of expectations for behavior, and (b) contradictions within the recognized set of expectations for behavior.

A strong step forward in the Sociology of Education achieved in good part by making sociology the operative word.—HOPE L. KLAPPER, New York University

Clark introduces his book as "a study in the sociology of education." The book is that and much more. His selections from the literature of psychology, social psychology, and sociology are skillfully woven into a meaningful text that looks at education in the broadest sense. As a foundation reading, the book has considerable merit. For the curriculum planner, the ideas are provocative and challenging. Clark's effort to educate himself and others about "connections between education and society and the nature of educational institutions today" is a successful one.—A. HARRY PASSOW, Teachers College, Columbia University

EDUCATING THE EXPERT SOCIETY

By BURTON R. CLARK, Yale University

Clark examines present-day educational institutions and practices in the United States within the framework of three dominant characteristics of modern society: rapid technological change; a high birth rate and the resulting trend toward mass education; and the problems posed by the cold war.

Among the chapter titles are: Education as a Cultural Agent; Education, Occupation and Status; Education and Minorities; Student Culture in Colleges; Student Culture in High School; The Educational Process and the Expert Society.

STOCKPILING STRATEGIC MATERIALS: Politics and National Defense

By GLENN H. SNYDER,
State University of New York at Buffalo

The aim of this book is twofold: first, to tell the history of a program which has been almost totally neglected in other studies of postwar national defense policy; and second, to analyze that history in terms of the political forces, both within and outside this government. It covers the legislative history of the Stockpiling Act of 1946, procurement of materials and establishment of stockpile goals prior to 1950, the industrial mobilization program during the Korean War, significant changes during the Eisenhower administration, the investigation of the program by the "Symington Subcommittee" in 1962 and 1963, and certain current problems.

MEDICARE: POLICY AND POLITICS

Edited by EUGENE FEINGOLD, University of Michigan

"This study of medical politics and medical economics is . . . concerned with the struggle over government participation in the financing of medical care for the elderly that has been a major issue on the American political scene for half a dozen years. . . The student of contemporary American politics will find here all of the characters in the modern political passion play: the influential interest group, the powerful Congressional committee chairman, the political party, the Presidential candidate. This volume shows the attempt to translate a felt need into a public policy and the response to this attempt. It deals with the creation and marshaling of public opinion, the political activities of interest groups, and the enactment of legislation. To the extent that it is successful, it should provide useful supplementary and exemplary material for the commonly offered courses in Public Opinion and Pressure Groups and the Legislative Process, as well as for the introductory course in American Government."—from the Preface.

The book presents various points of view in the words of those holding these viewpoints; at the same time, an analytical framework is presented. It contains basic data on the organization and financing of medical care which permits the reader to evaluate the policy positions of contending groups.

Farber has developed and applied a theoretical scheme to the American family based on careful scholarship that is highly imaginative and creative. I believe this is one of the very few major works on the sociology of the family to emerge during the past twenty years.—ROBERT R. BELL, Temple University

His conceptual approach to the family, involving the notions of "orderly replacement" and "permanent availability" are different as well as stimulating.—FELIX M. BERARDO, Washington State University

This is a much needed and exciting contribution. Brings together for the first time some very pertinent material. — ARMIN GRAMS, The Merrill-Palmer Institute

FAMILY: Organization and Interaction

By BERNARD FARBER, University of Illinois

Farber seeks explanation of change and stability in family life by examining two postulates: (1) orderly replacement of family culture from generation to generation, and (2) permanent availability of all cross-sex adults as mates, regardless of age or marital status.

Early family sociology, modeled after Darwinian biology, centered on the investigation of social origins and the evolution of the family. Later studies focused upon the transition of the family from a basic institution in an agricultural society to an ephemeral small group in modern industrial society. This book examines interaction and organization in the contemporary family as a reflection of basic changes in kinship rules.

SOCIOLOGICAL MEASUREMENT: An Inventory of Scales and Indices

By CHARLES M. BONJEAN, University of Texas, RICHARD J. HILL, Purdue University, and S. DALE MCLEMORE, University of Texas

This book is designed to provide those engaged in sociological research with a large body of recent literature in regard to measurement. It has three purposes. The first is to assess the extent of continuity in social research as well as the substantive areas within which it occurs. This was accomplished through a content analysis of four major journals for the period 1954-1965. The analysis was designed to locate those conceptual areas which have generated the greatest empirical activity during the period reviewed, and to identify the specific scales and indices that have been used and cited with greatest frequency.

The second is to present a series of bibliographies, based on the content analysis, that will serve as an aid during the initial stages of research. The bibliographies are organized by conceptual classes and include only those sources discussing or using measures of each of these concepts.

Finally, where the authors have located continuity in regard to specific measures, descriptions of each of the measures are presented. There are descriptions of more than 50 scales and indices.

The book is copiously indexed to facilitate reference use.

AFRICA: Social Problems of Change and Conflict

Edited by PIERRE L. VAN DEN BERGHE,
University of Washington

A new look at Sub-Saharan Africa examining today's African societies in all their bewildering complexity and rapid change. The focus is on sociology, as opposed to either history or ethnology.

The 32 papers collected here are diverse in viewpoint and methodological approach, yet present a uniform body of conclusions. They tend to discard the harmonious, equilibrated models of African societies and emphasize instead dissension, conflict, dysfunctions, and malintegration. Analyses dwell less on the conventional units of "tribes" than on the more significant larger territories or countries. The processes of urbanization and industrialization in Africa are regarded as powerful generators of social change, not as influences contaminating and disrupting traditional cultures. Town and country are viewed not as polar opposites, but as interpenetrating milieux.

Among subjects discussed are social and cultural pluralism; the impact of labor migration; the evolution of the African elite; tribalism, nationalism, and Pan-Africanism; social consequences of economic development; industrial efficiency and the urban African; race attitudes and racial tensions; transformation of kinship structure and marriage rules; and changes in the status of women.

THE DISADVANTAGED LEARNER: Knowing, Understanding, Educating

Edited by STATEN W. WEBSTER,
University of California, Berkeley

"... this collection seeks to assist the reader in getting to know the disadvantaged groups of this country and their millions of learners. Second, it aims to increase the reader's awareness and understanding of the problems associated with teaching the disadvantaged student. Finally, it is hoped that this book will introduce to the reader some of the exciting and fruitful approaches used by educators in attempting to educate the disadvantaged student more effectively.

"In essence, this book makes use of the sociocultural approach to increased understanding of and effectiveness with the disadvantaged learner. It is based upon the premise that one must know something about the learner, his subculture, and his sociophysical environment before one can realistically see his problems and help him to learn in an effective manner."—from the Preface.

The book is divided into three sections. Each section has a pertinent bibliography of recommended readings. There is an index.

POVERTY IN AMERICA

Edited by MARGARET S. GORDON, University of California, Berkeley, with a Foreword by LLOYD ULMAN, University of California, Berkeley

All aspects of strategy and tactics in the "war on poverty" are critically examined in these papers from a conference sponsored in the spring of 1965 by the Institute of Industrial Relations at the University of California. Vital policy questions are raised in the areas of economics, education, social welfare, and urban and rural development. Discussants included thirty-five distinguished scholars in the pertinent disciplines, administrators in the field, and civic and government leaders.

*Abridged

Very useful in introducing members of my seminar to the areas of major concern currently in the field of constitutional law, and to different approaches to the analysis of the court's role in the political process. — JOSEPH KELLENBACH, University of Michigan

Spaeth's book is an excellent supplement to existing casebooks and textbooks in constitutional law. . . . In addition, this book would make an excellent selection to include in a series of paperbacks for use in an American government course.—P. C. McLaurin, Jr., Mississippi State University

I have found it well-written and the mere idea of this type of book itself intrigues me.—DONALD R. HARKLEROD, New York University

THE WARREN COURT: Cases and Commentary

By HAROLD J. SPAETH, Michigan State University

"All too often the student enrolled in a course in constitutional law or politics terminates his study at some point in the past. Hopefully, this book will provide the material necessary to insure a measure of currency in such courses of study. . . . Although I believe that the cases themselves are important in the study of the Supreme Court, their significance is not self-evident. Hence, I have sought to blend the features of the casebook with those of the textbook. The cases printed in this book include majority as well as minority opinions, with the cases themselves covering the period 1953 (when the Warren Court came into existence) to the end of 1965.

"My focus in this book is primarily upon the leading cases decided by the Warren Court. By a leading case I mean one which produces what appears to be a pronounced impact upon the course of American government and society and/or contains an incisive statement of values considered important to the operation or character of American government or society."—from the Foreword.

The book is supplemented with behavioral data and analyses including studies of attitudes and voting behavior. It presents material in a political context rather than a legal or historical one.

YUGOSLAVIA—A MULTINATIONAL STATE: Regional Differences and Political Response

By JACK C. FISHER, Cornell University

This book examines the effects of the uniform system of local administration superimposed over the country's heterogeneous cultural and economic matrix after World War II. An investigation of the differences and similarities among the cities and communes was conducted to obtain quantitative expression of existing regional variation. Particular stress is placed on the increasing functional importance of local governmental units—especially the communes—and the communal system's impact on development goals and procedures. Functions such as city planning and housing are also examined. This analysis and approach provide insights into Yugoslavia's unique historical evolution and the functioning of its contemporary administrative system.

A further objective is to present a source of statistical and cartographical information on Yugoslavia. Numerous original maps and photographs show urban and regional variation, and there is a glossary and list of place names.

THE LAW OF THE POOR

Edited by JACOBUS TENBROEK, University of California, Berkeley, and the Editors of California Law Review

This symposium was the result of a project organized by Professor tenBroek who, recognizing the vital current importance of the subject and the dearth of exploration of it, arranged for an investigation by scholars and practitioners in the fields of law, social science, and social work. The conference was held under the sponsorship of the Center for the Study of Law and Society, and the papers are published by Chandler in cooperation with California Law Review.

The purpose of the conference was to provide a critical review of the rules and procedures, doctrines and presuppositions of the law of the poor, primarily

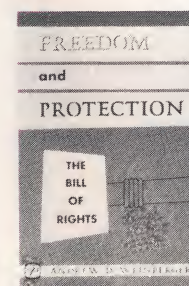

THE NEGRO VOTES

By CHARLES AIKIN, University of California, Berkeley

"... the principal bases for an analysis of the history and present status of the vote, of the Negro's right to exercise it, and of attacks on this right are contained in this small volume—in words drawn from the Constitution, in certain conclusions of the nation's Commission on Civil Rights, and primarily in the eleven selected Supreme Court decisions that constitute the major part of this survey."—from the Preface.

Decisions included are: GUINN v. U.S., LANE v. WILSON, NIXON v. HERNDON, NIXON v. CONDON, GROVEY v. TOWNSEND, SMITH v. ALLWRIGHT, U.S. v. CLASSIC, COLEGROVE v. GREEN, SOUTH v. PETERS, GOMILLION v. LIGHTFOOT, BAKER v. CARR, ALABAMA v. U.S. (Addendum).

FREEDOM AND PROTECTION: The Bill of Rights

By ANDREW D. WEINBERGER, The New York Bar

"There are many noteworthy features to this handbook. It is attractive and concise, for one. It includes references to, and opinions of, the Supreme Court through its 1961-1962 term. . . . It omits peripheral and superfluous recitations of fact that delay reaching of the jugular; only essentials for the development of concepts are retained. It includes, in its appendices, a copy of the Bill of Rights in the United States Constitution, and copies as well of the Declaration of Independence, Canadian Bill of Rights, and Universal Declaration of Human Rights. A good bibliography and a table of cases are included."—HILLIARD A. GARDINER in The American Journal of Comparative Law

An extraordinarily valuable contribution to clarifying the thinking and practice of the planning profession particularly and the municipal government in general. It cannot be over-recommended as a major contribution to the field.—

THE URBAN GENERAL PLAN

By T. J. KENT, JR., University of California, Berkeley

Professor Kent, with 25 years of experience as planner, teacher, and city councilman, describes in this book the kind of instrument he believes an urban general plan should be. He sets forth how it should be developed, implemented, and maintained to be of maximum service to the changing city it is designed to serve.

Included are maps, and schematic drawings from plan documents of major cities including Copenhagen, Washington, D.C., Philadelphia, San Francisco.

URBAN TRANSPORTATION AND PUBLIC POLICY

By LYLE C. FITCH, assisted by HOWARD N. MANTEL, and ANN-MARIE WALSH, Institute of Public Administration

This study explores physical, institutional, and conceptual deficiencies in urban transportation facilities and policies, and factors which impede improvement; questions of pricing, subsidies, and cost characteristics of different modes; adequacy of present organization for policy planning, policy decisions, and policy implementation; technological potentialities for improving urban transportation, forms of financial assistance, development of federal policy on urban transportation, and possible techniques for providing federal assistance.

MIGRATION AND METROPOLITAN GROWTH: Two Analytical Models

By IRA S. LOWRY, Massachusetts Institute of Technology

This book, the first to be published by Chandler for the Institute of Government and Public Affairs, University of California, Los Angeles, is a statistical study of migration among and to metropolitan areas of the United States during 1950-1960. It reveals and interprets systematic relationships between the size of such migration flows and selected geographical, economic, and demographic characteristics of origin and destination. The findings lead to the formulation of two models of migratory behavior which show promise as predictors of local population changes due to migration.

From the Preface: "Early in 1964, I joined the staff of the Institute of Government and Public Affairs (IGPA) as a part-time consultant in order to participate in a broad-gage investigation of the methods and problems of regional development planning and, in particular, of the information required for such planning. My colleagues at the Institute recognized the crucial role in the planning process of economic and demographic forecasting, and the unsatisfactory states of these arts, especially as they pertain to regions of the nation. They consequently encouraged me to explore the issues in my own way. This monograph is the primary result of my exploration."
